English architecture. When entering one cannot but be immersed in the architectural grandeur, the drama of the space and shape, interactions between form and function, and a sense of the faith and divine purpose for which they were created. Because of their chequered history of building and rebuilding, from the Norman Conquest in 1066 through to the Dissolution and Reformation in 1539-41, they exhibit a wide variety of architectural styles, evolution and implementation - both within one building as well as between them - providing great scope for innovation and excitement in the creation of space and vision. Fortunately for his kingdom his young queen, Bywyd was as sharp as he was dull. She advised him in all matters of state, and benevolently attended concerned citizens and visiting dignitaries alike, always with a graceful nod to her husband and a quiet "May it please your Majesty." So it was that they ruled in peace for many years troubled only by the lack of Ysbryd-ane an heir to carry on the divine dragon blood of Gwirions ancestors. When Bywyd found herself full with child at last she rejoiced that their kingdom would be secured, their rule assuredly peaceful for the rest of their lives. And when the child was born, with raven black hair so dark against eyes as blue as lightning and skin as pale as snow, they called her Eirwyn and raised her to understand the five aspects of the dragon that she must ever personify to rule her people. Before her sixth birthday, Eirwyn was already tired of the dusty words she had learned by rote.
