

Paintings in Light, an Advent calendar

Stained glass windows have been a major part of European church architecture since the twelfth century. With light shining through their jewel-like panes, the windows, showing symbols and images from religious stories, infuse the dark church with a mystical quality. Executed in Florence circa 1493-1503 by Giovanni di Domenico, The Virgin Annunciate and The Angel of the Annunciation stained glass windows are reproduced in acetate on the face of an Advent Calendar in collaboration with the National Gallery of Art. Place the Advent calendar so that light shines through the acetate windows for a magical medieval Annunciation. The history and technique of stained glass are explained behind the first 23 windows and are illustrated with details from Giovanni's originals. Behind the 24th window is The Annunciation, a painting by Jan Van Eyck (circa 1434-1436). The triptych Advent calendar measures 9 1/2 x 11 1/2 when closed and 11 1/2 x 20 when the panels are open. It comes in a poly bag, suitable for storage.

Fortunately for his kingdom his young queen, Bywyd was as sharp as he was dull. She advised him in all matters of state, and benevolently attended concerned citizens and visiting dignitaries alike, always with a graceful nod to her husband and a quiet "May it please your Majesty." So it was that they ruled in peace for many years troubled only by the lack of Ysbryd-ane an heir to carry on the divine dragon blood of Gwirions ancestors. When Bywyd found herself full with child at last she rejoiced that their kingdom would be secured, their rule assuredly peaceful for the rest of their lives. And when the child was born, with raven black hair so dark against eyes as blue as lightning and skin as pale as snow, they called her Eirwyn and raised her to understand the five aspects of the dragon that she must ever personify to rule her people. Before her sixth birthday, Eirwyn was already tired of the dusty words she had learned by rote.
